

From a Vacant School to a Beacon of Resilience

We are transforming Marshall Elementary School into a Community Resilience Hub, empowering South and West Jackson with clean energy, affordable housing, healthcare, workforce development, and wellness programs.

This hub will serve as a center for sustainability and community strength, addressing critical needs while fostering resilience and opportunity for all

The Power-Up Jackson Community Resilience Hub project aims to transform challenges into opportunities for South and West Jackson. By repurposing the vacant Marshall Elementary School, we will create a vibrant, multi-functional space powered by clean energy. The hub will address critical community needs by providing affordable solar-powered housing, accessible healthcare, workforce development in green industries, urban gardens to combat food deserts, and year-round wellness and youth programs. Through extensive community engagement, innovative design, and partnerships with local leaders, we are building a future that fosters resilience, equity, and sustainability—empowering residents to thrive today and for generations to come.
